EXTENDED CONTENT LABELS

Dual Language/Translated labels are available in 25 languages. Large Print and Controlled Substance Safety Labels (CSSLs) are available in a booklet-style design affixed to the medication bottle.

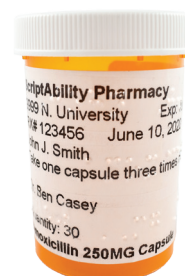

AUDIBLE LABELS

A pharmacist programs a small electronic label with all your prescription information, including drug name, dosage, instructions, warnings and more. Audible translation is available in 18 languages. A free-on-loan ScripTalk Station Reader or free ScripTalk Mobile App can be used to access all the label information out loud.

BRAILLE LABELS

A clear, Grade 2 Braille overlay is added by the pharmacist on top of your existing prescription label. Braille Prescription Labels meet the guidelines and recommendations set by the U.S. Access Board.

SPREAD THE WORD BY:

- Educating your friends, family and others about the importance of prescription label safety. Share your personal experience managing or helping someone else to manage prescriptions with vision loss, print impairment or Limited English Proficiency.

- Asking your pharmacist about the availability of free accessible prescription labels.
- Looking for low vision fairs, health fairs, ethnic health events and other community events where you can educate others about the availability of free accessible prescription labels.

- Leveraging Facebook and Twitter to share messages about the availability of accessible prescription labels and pharmacies in your area that offer them.

- Sharing your experience with local media and encourage them to do a story on these lifesaving labels.

- Finding your legislator to advocate for an accessible labeling law at usa.gov/elected-officials.

Laws have been passed in several states; see the progress being made at
